We left from the south, increasing the altitude.
Then drove through to play to the college crowd.
But they didn't show and we played on a big rock stage making big rock wages and we took what was left from the cooler and split
It was a spring break so you should have known that it wasn't loaded
That our drummer was posing
But you were too wrecked to realize...
The kids were a blaze, drinks cradled in every hand
And our battle cry was belated by six months
But they didn't care and you ran to the top stair opened the door to see her then She wanted you to: she didn't seem to care
And it was on spring break, so you should have known that it wasn't loaded
That our drummer was posing
But you were too wrecked to realize...
Spring break broke...
