

Death Comesto Matteson "Anchors Me Down"

A love affair between the earth and sky black and blue and moving light years of space contain our meager lives governed in their turning baptism by fire celestial fatal flaw machine of desire melts and then dissolves

no broken wing
can keep you from flying away the earth pulls me down your shooting star falls quickly to the ground my broken heart anchors me down i search for you somewhere in this placid bruise the woman in the moon golden, these stolen glances start to burn new constellations of you suffocate in this heat this hopeless infancy again you come crying run away from me

orion, throw down your sword i've no more waxen wings just like the sun
she sides with gravity
