His subtle craziness has been left behind in one of the train carriages

The wind in the subway is heavier than the memories

The whole city has been waiting for me

There is a feeling that is still drifting about

My only regret towards him is the day we broke up

My surge of tears could not stop flowing

If that moment could start all over again, I will not cry

To let him know that I can still live well

I love him zealously and madly

My dreams have been cruelly shattered yet I cannot forget

For him I once believed that tomorrow would mean the future

No matter how bad the situation may be

I refused to come to my senses

I love him till I stumbled into despair

My heart has been deeply hurt yet I cannot forget

We no longer belong in this place

What initially used to be paradise has now become absurd

If there are any regrets left, what can I do?

After being hurt and going through pain before finally understanding

Does that mean everything will be fine?

We once leaned on each other's shoulders

But now we are walking our own paths amongst the crowd

I love him zealously and madly

forget

We cannot escape that the deeper the love the more we hurt one another

The deeper the reliance, the greater the emptiness

How should I love?

I love him zealously and madly

forget
For him I once believed that tomorrow would mean the
future
No matter how bad the situation may be
I refused to come to my senses

I love him till I stumbled into despair
My heart has been deeply hurt yet I cannot forget
We no longer belong in this place
What initially used to be paradise has now become
absurd

If there are any regrets left, it is the day we broke up
My surge of tears could not stop flowing
If that moment could start all over again, I will not cry
To let him know that I can still live well
