Sacrilege

In a hamlet far away with Christians lives an old man so wise
with power so strong.
He has seen kingdoms fall and rise.

Then came the strong men from the north with only one thing on their minds:
Kill, rob, rape and burn.

When he looked into the Crystal ball,
he wondered why.
He knew this freedom was going to fall
and build flames up to the sky.

These people live in peace
with happiness and freedom.
The children play together
and love is a natural thing.

Sacrilege. Sacrilege. Sacrilege. Sacrilege.

The savages from the north with swords,
hungry for Christian treasures.
Gold and silver, women bodies and blood
just for the sake of pleasure.

The old man so wise,
killed a beast - sacrifice
and prayed to his idol:
Blow away this nightmare.

A blaze, a voice:
You evil, forever I make you blind!
Return to hell!
You evil, forever I take your mind!

These people live in peace
with happiness and freedom.
The children play together

and love is a natural thing.
