before the dawn one of you will betray me for you my unholy brother better off if you weren't born for tonight the prophecy will be fulfilled strike down the leader and the people will scatter sold my life for a price and now my blood lays on your hands high priests have gathered to arrange false evidence and crucify send forth no more witnesses we have ruled against this blasphemer your saviour is worthy of death awaiting the fate of the world release the notorious prisoner and leave the righteous to die betrayal of life you stole my life you sold away the world weighs on your shoulders repent or take the blame never believe open arms set to deceive never believe at the altar i prepare to die honesty means nothing you've proven that to me i can see right through you scarred for life you'll always be hypocrite until the end yours was by far the superior sin epitome of corruption let the cycle of life begin i can see you fighting, fighting for what's right through trials and tribulations you're better off to die living for yourself observing no one else faith and comfort bring pain and misery as my life does end look to begin again try not to pretend taking sin after sin now i see the way life's paved with bitter hate looking to the sky my soul begins to cry accept life's final plea of which to set me free though it's not meant to be denying honesty

never believe at the altar i prepare to die
