(Dolly Parton)

My train of thought was broken by a sudden burst of laughter
Something badly needed to brighten up the chores Seemed old Mrs. Bailey had accidentally fell In the water being used to scrub the floors Now Mrs. Bailey was the meanest matron at the home
She believed in lots of work with little play
And we laughed till we bent double Though we knew we'd get in trouble
But trouble's all we had at evening shade Now evening shade was where they claim to teach you understanding
To teach you love and keep you off the streets
And all the kids that live here are said to be a problem Juvenile delinquents so to speak

But understanding isn't learned from punishment and anger
An iron has no gentle touch and love ain't learned from hate
The reason we were here is 'cause we had no one who cared
But they cared even less at evening shade

Little Susan Bradley, one night had wet her bed Mrs. Bailey took the razor strap and beat her half to death
And I knew that something must be done to put an end to this
And so I started talking plans with the older kids

Plans were that Joe Johnson would steal the kerosene And I would get some matches when nobody seen Beckie Adams would make sure the kids were all outside Billy Watson would look out for the evil eye

Now Mrs. Bailey took a nap at three o'clock each day We knew that she'd be a'sleeping as the plans got underway

Now that its all over and the sun is going down There's no evening shade 'cause we burned it to the ground
