sitting in this carseat has made me see, maybe all I need is you and me. Maybe we could both drive off to somewhere that it always rains. because who needs the light when we can see ourselves so clearly from the inside out? We can tint these windows from the inside out and spend all day and night revealing feelings to ourselves we never thought we knew. discuss the end of time and when we get there what we will miss remembering. for me it is these nights with you. because it's times like this when time feels so unnecessary. because who needs time to keep ticking when they are happy where they are? and you can be my witness when I say, right now everything belongs and if only this sky were tinted I would sit here in this carseat forever discovering skin under the scars and heartbeats under the hurt.
