Watching my window I was led like a child
As the roadway lamplights Misguided my mind through the night
A shadow of limits
We were racing the rain
My hands held the wheel My eyes tried to hold their place there must have been a time when I thought that you were watching it had to be when my senses lost control

I thought I'd slipped away I thought I could still feel us moving it must have been a cloud no bigger than a man's hand

Every reason I risk my life
To come back to you
Is locked behind your door
You're my immunity Outside I watched you burn Heavy hearts were bleeding
A cry for help, a familiar voice My melting hands streaked the glass

as I walked away
I wondered what had really happened had I run out of time did I push myself to far As my last step fell
I felt my hands upon the wheel Had I come back to life or did I ever leave at all in higher lives
we seem to be always a moment too late
we're past the time
when we looked on now we're
the ones who help to set the sun
this time for real I locked the door behind me

my mind was still a wreck from what I saw For when my hands are still I'll recognize the message never again will my senses lose control
in higher lives
We seem to be
Always a moment too late
