Standing before me, you, never said a word.
Or maybe you did, but I just never heard.
You said goodnight and I just turned away.
If I could have read your mind I would have made you stay.

(Chs)-You said that nothing was wrong.
But there was something else inside.
I should have kept you here,
And found out what you were trying to hide.
I've scrubbed it time again, but it won't come off at all.
Your silhouette remains upon my wall.

The guilt just rips me open, everyday.
Self forgiveness will never come my way.
I've showed it to my friends, while they comfort me.
Point it out but they still just don't seem to see.

(Chs)
It haunts me, reminds me, I did nothing at all.
Your silhouette remains upon my wall.

In anger, frustration,
Why did you leave me this way?
It haunts me, it taunts me, it just won't go away.
I've painted it time and again.
But it wont come off at all.
Your silhouette remains upon my wall

(Solo)

You said that nothing was wrong.
But there was something else inside.
I should have kept you here,
And found out what you were trying to hide.
I've scrubbed it til I bleed and I've rubbed my knuckles raw.
Your silhouette remains upon my wall.

Even in this padded room, they've put me in so small.
Your silhouette remains upon my wall.
