I want to get from this modest thing
And I expect some persuading
Then I might lose everything
Maybe my mind

And I'm coy and embarrassed too
And ashamed I'm in love with you
And for all I've done to you, trying again

My bouncing head it shakes
And my feelings are reeling
That's when my heart
It breaks like your car

Before my sense hits the floor again
Better lock up my door again
As the hope drowning medicine flows in your arms
From the look that you gave to me
I could tell there was empathy
As my self-spurning chemistry
Tries once again

I never said a word
About your flirting
Your smirking
Another stinking curse pulls me apart

Behind the windows of my mind
Lurks a fear of womankind
'Cause I never got valentines
Just like all the rest

Just one more reminder
Of the liar
I admire
This kind of blindness
Makes sense

But you've scared me with your friends
And your fears
And tears

I'm asking you to lend me your hands
