Your words are coat hanger thin
Why are you speaking at all?
Why are you torturing me?
No, I don't want this at all.

I see the burn in your cheeks as you change what was truth You offer pieces of nothing as irrefutable proof.

And if the sky does fall down Like you tell me it should I doubt I'll even notice
I doubt I even could

I'm too busy just laughing at the voice in my head that keeps on telling me secrets about what you once said.

You've never looked more beautiful
I've never felt so alone

And as this time passes by
I find I'm listening more
To this language you're using
But your grammar is poor

I'd swear I heard you say that you loved me way back when Perhaps a previous life-time
And this absolves you of sin

And if I had the strength to argue Then perhaps I'd beg to differ
But instead I'll nod my head
As my muscles get much stiffer

My thoughts are turning away from this ranting that you rave
I find I think of just one phrase

A single thought my mind will save

You've never looked more beautiful
I've never felt so alone

And if you think you know why I'm here all alone
You are so wrong
You haven't got a clue what I'm trying to do
