I met her sadly in the slowly falling rain Crying softly in her loneliness and pain
Knowing no one needin' someone bad as me
And she told me as I held her trembling hand Walking slowly how she'd never known a man Living lonely in her cottage by the sea When the morning came her tears had changed to laughter
And before the night her heart beat close to mine
And I thought as she lay sleeping of the secrets she was keeping Hidden somewhere in the silence of the shadows of her mind

In the morning as I wakened with the dawn Without warning I could feel that she was gone Leaving nothing but her silence next to me
And lonely footprints that I followed in the sand

Walking slowly for I knew where they would end Disappearing in the silence of the sea
And I sometimes hear the echoe of her laughter
As I search for what I know I'll never find For the answer I was seeking was the secrets she's still keeping Hidden somewhere in the silence of the shadows of
her mind
Hidden somewhere in the silence of the shadows of
her mind
