the first time that I heard them coming by there was a sound like thunder from the sky and mama said "don't run and hide" it's not the thunder but the men who ride the king's horses

the men sat off outside our little inn the commendant got sight of me and grinned he said while mama's eyes went wide tonight we'll take your daddy out to ride
the king's horses

for a king is a king and a peasant is a peasant and the laws are always made for the king and the king's men are payed and they do what he tells them to do so when they were all finished my father was dead and I began to hate the men who rode
the king's horses

I swore that someday they would bleed the same way that my father did the way to satisfy my soul could only be to kill the men who rode
the king's horses

the time went by and I went big and strong I still remember those who did me wrong I practiced hard with hands and feet still dreaming of the day when I will meet
the king's horses

but the king is the king and a man is a man when you're poor you're not hard to persuade and the king had the money, and I had the hunger and strength and he saw I was strong and he bought me and I forgot my holy oath and rode among
the king's horses

and so with pain I had to hide the crying voice I heard inside the only way I could survive was to become one of the men who ride

the king's horses

I've often thought that it is very strange the power and the money make you change today I kill and rape and fight together with the ruthless men who ride
the king's horses
