Trailing out through the golden dawn
Veering into the angry swarm
Carried by the birds into the dark
Swooping down through the blurry clouds

Peeling back the enormous shroud
To release the beast that lurks behind

Mother nature calls your name
Leads you to an open space
The winter is coming
And you have no time to waste

Later on at the [unverified] lair
See the birds melt into the air
No one could protect them from the sun
Blazing on for another world

Setting off through the silent swirl
Think of all the faces they may know

Mother nature calls your name
Leads you to an open space
The winter is coming
And you have no time to waste

Free at last now, the bird has flown
Looking down from his floating throne
Just a lonely stranger in the sky
Down below, people walk the road

They never pause as they scurry home
They never see the birds are floating by
