Â“My dear Tom,

I met two men today. They had your picture and they knew your name. And whatÂ’s more they said youÂ’d done some awful things. Like you said Tom, I did not say a thing.

I hate to lie. ItÂ’s true. Today I lied for you.Â”

Â“My Dear Jules,

You must understand that four walls cannot contain a man. So I have hid above the forest in the hills. Call to me from the tallest tree to signal.

And I will hear and see you high up waiting for me.Â”

No one had ever seen such a large blaze as they did that day.

She had climbed the tallest tree, but before she did she had lit the base, and she cried, Â“You and I could never have peace again because you know I would rather die than to live a life hidden!Â”

("As sure as rain, as sure as sin, youÂ’ll never break a heart again.")
