Epicure - Life Sentence

she would forgive the truth if you left her with a smile like you used to do she would bring the cups to you just to make you stay a while as if you wanted to so lie down, sleep around what's bending now will break your light shattering my calm

a life sentence in your arms breath in now, breath out a toxic it suffocates sirens wailing in alarm

his own reads like a prison cell wall scratching days down as they pass not recalling them all his thoughts they twist and turn investing everything in her and not expecting a return will that be good enough for her so lie down, sleep around whats bending now will break

--not 100% i'm sure, but a rough idea.
