Last night I had a dream about you,
but you weren't in it;
It all was so symbolic,
but when I woke up everything felt real.

Driving fast across a desert
in the early morning,
with two strange people talking,
in the front seats
acting like I'm not there,
heading somewhere,
taking me away—

Until you see me coming
I'll shine a light in the darkness,
I'm calling,
I'm calling you.

And I will look for an answer,
a flashing hope in the distance.
I'll find you.
I want to know your reply.

In the manic dawn of morning,
I finally found a connection to your voice,
on the distant line,
you were always there.

And the wind outside was reckless,
as we kept searching,
the road was far behind,

and in my mind
you were the only reason I was lost,
'cause I was lost for you.

Until you see me coming
I'll shine a light in the darkness,
I'm calling,

Iâ'm calling you.

And I will look for an answer,
a flashing hope in the distance.
Iâ'll find you.
I want to know your reply.

No other place
Iâ'd rather be,
I write a song
for you to hear,
because the sun
you bring,
takes this loneliness
from me.

Until you see me coming
Iâ'll shine a light in the darkness,
Iâ'm calling,
Iâ'm calling you.

And I will look for an answer,
a flashing hope in the distance.
Iâ'll find you.
I want to know your reply.

Last night I had a dream about you.
