Jp: craig, you've been to see manchester city. how was it? Cs: er, grim.Jp: grim? really? well once again, you see, because people always assume that I've got loads of technology available to me here and lots of people rushing about giving me bits of paper like theyN television. in fact I'm just watching the television so erm...Cs: [...]]p: oh right yeah. okay go on, tell us all about itCs: well I mean the first half we were all over them. it's a typical city game, y'know. ye were like totally outplayed, and they're rubbish anyway, west ham, it's got to be said. [.. .] but ermWere all over them in the first half and I don't know what he puts in the tea in the second half but erm we were like kinda zombies when we came back on. there weren't any good players apart frRocastle which I thought was Jr: [...] that one little thing where he sort of.....Cs: yeah we do we play lots of football, loads of passing, they play too much football, they're just kind of er. . . everyone's like looking for a passing opportunity rather than like a scoringTunity.Jp: not going to go down though, are they, craig? Cs: er.. .i don't know. everyone else in er. . . everyone else thinks we're gonna go down but they've just like suddenly come out of closets, y'know, they've like discovered their grandfather wasNited fanfar.Jp: rightCs: ...some years back it's like the whole of manchester at the moment anywayJp: I was told you see, I was always told er the conventional wisdom was that that isn't the case any more.Cs: well the true mancurian is the man city fan, I find.Jr: (laughs)Cs: I mean they're all reds really aren't they and er. . . What upsets you really is that the training that you must have in discussion at your own level regarding the existence of God is far greater than everybody that's ringing in tonight.
