Take the last train to nowhere by the time that you get back, i'll be here
somewhere in this crowd of straight-faced lies and lost among the miles of fast-paced lives and honest dreams
of going backwards
we're going backwards
against the grain forget my name
cause i will be gone
to better days when we were young

when december rain would fall and autumn leaves as well and the world would stop for anyone and not just for a while and the walls that tore us down were never quite so high and we understood the world this unforgiving life

it's got to get better cause this must be the most complicated waste of time so i turn to you to rip the pages from the book as the air-waves sing
