Today I'll watch the time come in taste the salt and sea and wind
And search for crumble castles in the sand Then I'll go back inside my mind think about you one more time
Then I mustn't pass this way again I'll see the road we traveled on when you were right and I was wrong But pride would never let me say it when
For a moment I still feel again burning lips and clinging hands
No I mustn't pass this way again For remembering's the hardest part of loving and a memory won't help her understand How a fool could turn away from all the giving
No I mustn't ever pass this way again

Today I'll think about the rain how the tiny raindrops came
And nestled there like temples on your skin

You just tossed them off and smiled at me said they came from God so let it be And very soon the sun would shine again But today the sun has gone away love is there in yesterday
But the past can't hold the future in its pen I'll just have to let it be let it fade into a memory
And never ever pass this way again For remembering's the hardest part of loving...
No I mustn't ever pass this way again
