[Incomprehensible]

You, you never looked so good Sipping life down like I wish I could
But these sober tears are all that's left to shed Sandy's soul, now made of bread

Face down beneath the rubble lies a man
Tales of the future already in the past
And of himself, well, he hasn't much to say
But wake the gods, it's a droodlin' day

He said, "I left my home where the dead never rose
But the streets of gold I've yet to find
And at the end of the day, all you can do is pray Without hope, well, you might as well be blind, yeah, be blind
Tomorrow comes a day too soon, tomorrow comes a day too soon

Angel, sweet angel of my youth
Where have you gone? You flew away too soon
This brick I built, now builds a higher wall
See it crumble, hear me fall
There hangs the fool, who once had it all

He said, "I left my home where the dead never rose
But the streets of gold I've yet to find
And at the end of the day all you can do is pray
Without hope, well, you might as well be blind, yeah, be
Tomorrow comes a day too soon, tomorrow comes a
day too soon

And though the road has yet to rise
On these hundred years that passed me by
And the blood with the river flows
Through the crimson field never sung
And, no, never sung

He said, "I left my home where the dead never rose
But the streets of gold I've yet to find

And at the end of the day all you can do is pray
Without hope, well, you might as well be blind, yeah, be
Tomorrow comes a day too soon, tomorrow comes a
day too soon
Tomorrow comes a day too soon, tomorrow comes a
day too soon

Ah, well you, you never looked so good
