i took her on a simple trip to see her husbands family and on the way upon her hip was laid my head down gently all due respect was meant and all the winds were in agreement that this was answering the call of awkward and true feeling a fireman her husband was and so to give him duty i duly tried to light a fire upon his rightful booty but beauty was my treasure then as through the hills i drove her and taught her that another man could have made love to her strange is good if it is kept a secret with the lovers who love their mates and love themselves and need the love of others through the window i could see the fields and clouds all passing as in the passenger position eleanor was thrashing i stopped the car we got a beer and then eased down the road a little guilt, and some guilt spilt and added to our load
