Once upon a time when mythic creatures thrived My land was pure, the forests primeval still And pagan reels would stir the crooked boughs Surrendering them to the whims of the whispering windÂ...

There flowers sprung beneath the cloven hoofs Of an elder being-far more ancient than the Olympians themselvesÂ...

The ancient trees know him by the name—Pan, what lust runs through thy veins!

The Dryads alone yet sing his fame—Pan, thy music the Gods entertains!

Ten score Satyr squires

With nymphs sought delightÂ...thy flute is divine O Pan, our music inspire!

Teach us thine art

The tunes that would win

The hearts of a nymph!

The ancient trees know him by the name—Pan, what lust runs through thy veins!

The Dryads alone yet sing his fame—Pan, thy music the Gods entertains!

Pan, great god

Spread panic in our enemyÂ's ranks!

We invoke thy name

In moonlit glades-grant us the gift

Of arcane prophecyÂ...

The ancient trees know him by the name—Pan, what lust runs through thy veins!

The Dryads alone yet sing his fame—Pan, thy music the Gods entertains!

(Orphic hymn to Pan excerpt:)

Â"I invoke the brawny Pan, the sky and the sea—I invoke earth, the sovereign queen and immortal fireÂ...

O friend of Echo, thou who dances with the nymphs, thou who knowest everything, bearer of light, the true horned ZeusÂ...Â"

I can hear the rivers lamenting and the willows weepÂ...

Pan, our forests doth miss youÂ...

For now a loathsome Christ has dubbed you Satan And cast thee in exileÂ...

But your shrines are not forgotten—there are those who still utter thy name

To restore thy glory and behold thee, Horned god, enthroned once more!

Â"Thou who changes the nature of every thing with thy predictions and guides the race of men upon this vast earthÂ...

But come o blessed one, thou courtier of Bacchus, come o inciting one, come to our holiest of sacrifices and grant us a good lifeÂ's ending by dispersing the frenzy of panic unto the four corners of the earthÂ...Â"
