All of us could dream about
A place of quiet rest, oh
All of us could do without
The pointless questions
Of worry and the fray today

Someday the light will be your sonnet
Someday the song will cover over you
Someday the time will be forever, oh

All of us could take a trip
To where the noise grows dim, oh
All of us could take a sip
Of that silence
Until the weight is gone, yeah, yeah
However little do we know
Of science, death, and life, oh
All of us could use a home
Where sons and daughters
Will try and steal your heart away

Someday the light will be your sonnet
Someday the song will cover over you
Someday the time will be forever, oh

Someday the light will be your sonnet
Someday the song will cover over you
Someday the time will be forever, oh

Someday the light will be your sonnet
Someday the song will cover over you
Someday the time will be forever, oh

Someday the light will be your sonnet
Someday the song will cover over you
Someday the time will be forever, oh
