"Young Man's Dream"

the clock is set for never 'til twelve I close my eyes and see myself passing countless vacant frames as all the beauty slowly drains to an empty theater a blackened screen where the silence lasts till the day begins there're few things that I wouldn't give to dream a young man's dream again the confidence to set aside the things that I have settled for

I cried a tear of grief in joy for visions of a little boy whose arrogance made him believe he could be anything he wanted to be dream again
