I should write her a letter
I suppose I should write her a letter
What the hell?
What the hell will I tell her
That she would want to hear
But that she deserves to hear
And I end up protesting what she can bear
Do I come up with a reason
Or am I inventing a reason
Something with so many pieces
That the only thing that's clear
If there's anything that's clear
Is whatever was is no longer here
Wait until what I should say
And maybe go away, but that's not the way it is
And I hope she'll understand,
Even though I know I may never see her again
I could hope, and I could wish and I could pray
But that doesn't really change a thing
And if I see her, I don't know if I could watch
And what there was turned into God knows what

So, so what about that letter?

Not that it could make anything better

The fact is, I feel like a coward

Pretending what happened hadn't

And nothing ever would, despite the fact it did

Could it be erased without rubbing it in her face?

Wait until what I should say

Would maybe go away, but that's not the way it is

And I hope she'll understand,

Even though I know I may never see her again
