Thursday afternoon you cast a shadow 'round my room the breeze moved the curtains & lifted my perfume into the air -- & danced with lazy curls in your hair the sun was in the sky like pink champagne & it glistened in your eyes all day I remeber you put a chill across my face like the air of december -- I swear I remember it that way
I swear I remember it
Where are you now?
You stood by the lake -- I wanted to take you for granted the grass was thin & high the water mirrored tiny sparkles to the sky I remember you put a chill across my face like the
air of december -- I swear I remember it that way
I swear I remember it
Where are you now?
In the by-myself mornings the birds windchime the treelimbs crackle & the sunshine climb up the sky like pink champagne that glistened in your eyes all day
I remember you put a chill across my face like the
air of december -- I swear I remember it that way
I swear I remember it
Where are you now?
