Lovers turn into monsters at the loss of all affection Almost like it was the affection that kept them from being monsters
And I could have used some warning
I was on that porch all morning
Smoking cigarettes and sinking deeper into doubt Could it be I am mistaken, have I stolen somebodys baby?
Is it possible for two people to need the same thing?
It's just the lines, they get so blurry Between what is once, and now required
And I don't know on which side his heart falls
But I know where mine is buried And it's so far from any wanting Yeah, it needs this to keep beating
It won't go on without it
If I'm still weighed down with subtleties Then I'll just come right out and say That I think that I deserve her
More than anyone deserves anything Maybe I am selfish, but there is no way to share this Theres not enough to go around, I dont care who else gets hurt
But Im still sick with empathy because I was stood in his place
I spent a year quietly dying while he let go and ignored her
And Im sure that there are reasons for everything that happens
And absence leads to adoration, yeah its nobodys fault
But now there is no way to change this So I just photographed and framed it
And its hanging in a hallway
That we have no right to walk back down But I hope that he feels better but Im sick of all the drama
I cant stand to see her crying, I just want this shit to end
And I want a place to hang out where record players play out
And theres a thousand movies rented for a thousand nights with her
