I woke up the other day walked out to blue suburban skies,
Skies filled with dreams and butterflies
And i wondered to myself how do I fit in this game?
Just a nameless face or faceless name Then i remembered an old friend of mine how we'd watch tv all night
Tell each other about our dreams, but i don't see him no more, no.
Light a cigarette and watch this day go by,
Burned another six minutes to the sky
I need a fucking answer but i guess that's why we live this life
A constant search for something right Now my mind is wondering how am i going to get fucked up today,
Light a bowl and see it all fade away
It happens everyday
