He smiled to the world
But his heart fell below his pain
He wanted only arms
But he lied to himself again

Closing doors and locking locks
He looked inside himself
Only to find
Deep down fear

Let me fall in two
Let me fall in two
Let me fall in two

Wide as a river and spread as thin
What he could start, no one would finish
Bottled up frowning

Treaties saw what they would Knowing not nothing
He was the only son

Closing doors and locking locks
He looked inside himself
Only to find
Seeping from his soul

Let me fall in two
Let me fall in two
Let me fall in two

Let me fall in two
What are you running from?
Let me fall in two
What are you running from?

Let me fall in two
What are you running from?
Let me fall in two
What are you running from?

He files himself away

And he finds himself a way
Only have to make the world come find you
Try to leave but there is nothing he can do

Down and cast eyes, scrutinized
As to what the lead ball hummingbird would not succumb
To find what is gone you must burn what is dried
And smell the essence of what remains inside

But blackened thoughts erase all that is past before him
Not knowing where he is coming
So you shake him around and scream into his eyes
That to drown in the water is to lie by his side

Closing doors and locking locks
He looked inside himself only to find
Sleeping from his soul

Let me fall in two
Let me fall in two
Let me fall in two

Let me fall in two
What are you running from?
Let me fall in two
What are you running from?

Let me fall in two
What are you running from?
Let me fall in two
What are you running from?
