Many Masks that you will try on the path to growing old Different faces, different skins to she'd until you reach your goal
The mold will set, the clay will dry to the mask from which you hide
What matters most, intact remains the person trapped inside
The beliefs and ideas, the thoughts that run amuck Will have all grown and changed but not have died with any luck
'Til then make fun of those who don't act or dress like you
While they're on the other side making fun of you Making Fun Of You
Some choose to hide behind a mohawk and tattoos Others choose a raiders jacket, others choose a tie and suit
But underneath our exo-skeleton we all look the same
Get some turpentine and start to strip away the name Strip away the face, identity, where they live Strip it all away 'til you see what it is that you have left
A heart and a mind and a soul too
On the inside they look just like you Just Like You
