"Hour Of The Beast"

Deep inside the heart lurk betrayal and the lies what way could I speak to be both mild and wise?
I can't make it undone neither change my name
'fore you get forgiveness bit head off your shame.

I swear I never want to cause you harm or hurt but which way I look now my eyes will avert I am you offending
the night is suspending the sinner is awake it's the hour of wolf.

I've told you that I love you and it's also true but there is someone else and it's not only you I could gobble her up, with drooling jaws her take, and I would also do so just for its own sake.

In my loneliness - and noone else will know my love is for both that's the cause of my woe - with no punishment and without remorse?
Knowing this at least:
it's the hour of the beast.

May I come to you now but for just a while Luther has gone home and I kiss you and smile then I'll make my mind up yet there is some time I see what I'm doing it's my life and my crime.

Until this very day I saw myself as a lamb and that's what I would be and that's how it should be I'm giving it all up my ultimate downfall the sunlight of the morning will chase the wolf away.

Oh I ought not be asinging Oh I should not be so meerying Oh my love hast gone to wander Oh my dear one went for journeying
