She's got a picture of him as a drifter she knows all about his outlaw past he couldn't see that, gave up his freedom she didn't even have to ask. as far as she knows, he's over all of that but she doesn't know how close he's come to going back

Cause the whiskey and the wind are stronger than they've ever been and not to now the two best friends he's ever known they keep whispering to him he don't need her when he's got them so he prays to God that they don't prove him wrong
again
or he'll be gone again with the whiskey and the wind

Stuck in Chicago, three feet of fresh snow but he's got a company creditcard the end of a long day, he eats in a cafe across the lobby from the hotelbar and the devil on his shoulder reminds him he's alone as he walks passed the bar, to his room to call back home

again

oooh the whiskey and the wind the whiskey and the wind
