It's always hardest to discuss what you should and you're never guiltier than when your intentions are good
And we're held together but my arms don't stretch so far anymore and thought the situation taunts and the sleepless energy of a stranger scrawls random letters you avoid the self absorbed frenzy of isolation grief and nostalgia makes reality of myths and turns apology into indictment These words kill

And it makes sense that we're here and it makes a mess to deny how far we're come and how much further we've to fall
