Dancing crazed and forgotten; six halls one heart.
One million ways to hold onto silhouettes. Ignored by tattered lips, broken calls.
It's like you've run out on yourself.
Split between death, good fortune and a staggering breath.
A broken key for a faulty lock.
A fevered pray for a dying flock.

Like consonants without vowels.
Jagged tongue wag, incessant stones passed- other hours merely forgotten.

It is with a dream and a heart that we proceed.
Not a thought to leave not another lifetime we need.
And though we may look behind; this visions seductive glance, we will pick up our pride and loosen our impenetrable stance.
