When he saw her getting of the bus
It seemed to wipe away the years
Her face was older, just a little rough
But her eyes were still so clear
He drank his coffee and he hurried out
Across before she walked away
Then he approached her like a little child
Too scared for what he had to say
"Hello, Louise,
Remember me?
Now should we part
Or stay awhile?
As if we were still lovers"
She took a moment just to recognise
The man she'd known so well before
And as he started to apologise
Lose any bitterness she bore
She gently put her finger on his lips
To let him know she understood
And with her suit case standing on the floor

Embraced him like a lover would

He told Louise

"You look so good

It's just you see

You make me feel

As if we were still lovers"

[Spoken:]

It's not always true that time heals all wounds.

There are wounds that you don't wanna heal,

the memories of something really good,

something truly real, that you never found again.

And though they talked for just a little time

Before she said she had to go

He saw the meeting as a tiny sign

That told him all he had to know

And so Louise

Waved from the bus

And as she left

She gave that smile

As if they were still lovers
