In the far east there lies the soul of a man left behind His silver wings they still shine in the pacific sunrise
Under the shroud of night
He gave it his best fight
With his rifle by his side and the enemy in sight in the war He didn't die still he gave up his life His green beret has found rest Clutched against his mother's chest Finally a peace without war peace from the trouble he bore
What would you say
What would you pray
The fight would not end
His only way out was death
