They say it's tough out there and that's for sure You pay your way twice over if not more They say that's the price of fame, and now you've made your name
Your friends don't even treat you like they used to do before They quote the man stars who've died so young From the ferment you seek to walk among They tell you who went mad, who went from good to bad
And they warn you of the dangers that await the highly strung

Who the hell are they?
And who cares what they say?
Who only seek to worry and alarm
Don't give those dogs their day
Don't let them get their way
'Cos I can see that fame's done you no harm

They say what you sacrificed to be the best Did you lose all other purpose in your quest?
They say that fame's your only goal and it messes up your soul
And they mention Elvis Presley and you're supposed to know the rest
They tell you cherish every minute that you're hot So at least you'll have some memories when you're not They say when fame becomes despair, you abandon what you learn
Which makes it that much harder to give up what you've got

Who the hell are they?
And who cares what they say?
Who only deal in envy and dismay
Don't give those dogs their day
Don't let them get their way
I'm glad to see your picture everywhere

They say celebrity extracts a heavy toll

That the devil soon appears to take control They say it leads you by the nose and they resite the names of those Who bled upon the alter of the demon rock 'n' roll

Who the hell are they?
And who cares what they say?
Who only seek to worry and alarm
Don't give those dogs thier day
Don't let them get thier way
'Cos I can see that fame's done you no harm
