ripped in two my heart cries out loud, "why are you doing this to me?" "oh god, I'm sorry," is my only reply.
I scribble down your name on this blank page that is no longer waiting for my ink I slip into sleep and awake finding your name crossed out, like it was never meant to be there in the first place in my hand lies the pen, the weapon of choice my pen is mightier than your heartbreaking voice now I'll write I love you down the same number of times you said it to me then I'll shove the hundreds of pages down your throat so you can use them for the next fool that comes around and thinks you're the world.
