Written by Butch Walker

I see him look at you and speak with such eloquence All I can do is rhyme eloquence with presidence It's the only word I think about When your his and not mine...
(So unkind, so unkind)
And it gets so annoying like a chick magazine with 17 subscription cards shoved in between They fall past my seat
And they land at my feet Right next my pride, now can you beat that?

And what I can I say I come racecars and goth rock
And what can you do
You're just California gridlock
I'm a broken down camaro overheated But you'll never know you're the one that caused this crash

7 days passed since your last break up note
With it's shaky and scribbled out, started over, broken words
That you wrote you know having what you needed wasn't good enough for you Never do, never do
And now you're in his house that's the size of a mall I've never seen a grand piano look so fucking small You know probably one of many things that are small about him too

And what I can I say I come racecars and punk rock
And what can you do
You're just California gridlock
I'm a broken down camaro overheated
But you'll never know you're the one that caused this

Can we just try to forget that we were ever very different Cause the tattoo on your shoulder baby tells me that ain't true

But I like that in you, so quit tryin' to prove yourself
And wake up and lose yourself in me

And what I can I say I come racecars and cock rock
And what can you do
You're just California gridlock
I'm a broken down camaro overheated
But you'll never know you're the one that caused this

And what I can I say I come racecars and pop rocks
And what can you do
You're just California gridlock
I'm a broken down camaro overheated
