I can't remember when seeing faces in clouds and in leaves became better than in places.
And as the sun goes down turning purple, orange and brown I'm pretending I don't have a secret, pretending that I don't have to keep it,
And though I'm heading North, will I end up right where I started from,
where I started from?

I know the pages
are turning fast but I've read this book before and this part doesn't last.
And as my head goes down, following cracks and lines on the ground I am looking a little older I am looking over my shoulder
And though I'm heading North
will I end up right where I started from,
where I started from?
