Well, once in a town by Kapokee Land there was a path, a sea and a land the neighbors weren't very nice though they made is a mysterious place to go the giraffes they didnt' know what to do they weren't very happy at the zoo they stretched their long and slender necks to try and get the leaves they couldn't and the gorillas cried boo hoo they didnt' dig life at the zoo they could only eat and piss and poo while the humans examined everything they'd do they teased and laughed at the animals made faces at the animals but what the humans didn't know they were confined in cages that didn't show so the peopel came and went away back to the ever daily day with little to do and less to say and their minds would wander and their thoughts would stray past the walls of Kapookee Land castles of mud, rivers of sand what they wouldn't understand is they lived in a prison built by man so man survived and life went on stood on the verge of getting it on never knowing all along that somewhere something was all wrong the walls that he sat behind were vague and undefined and so he'd never find he was confined inside

our bars are invisible
