Staring at the telly spitting something so irrelevant
You just left and I'm still glowing,
Freshly-sexed and never knowing if I'll have
Your face that close to mine again.
And it's an ever unfolding world of wonder,
Maybe you can see'd some light beneath this rock that
I'm under,
But I can't think outside the words I know.

But hey, you never know,
Anything is possible.
And hey, hey, hey, you never know,
Anything in this whole world,
Anything, anything, is possible.

And I was staring so long that I startled myself
When I bla-blinked and it made me think, why not
Wear your fanciest shoes in the rain?
And I was slumping on my stoop like I was bred in Jersey,

Wondering to myself if the world deemed me worthy
Of it's meaningless, so so meaningless grace

But hey, hey, you never know,
I said, anything is possible.
And hey, hey, you never know,
Anything in this whole world,
Anything, anything, is possible.

Hey, you never know.
Anything is possible.
And hey, you never know.
Anything in this whole world,
Anything, anything, is possible.
Yes, it is.
