With the whisper of dawn I am chained to a memory
And the silence of the morning wraps my heart in a blanket of used to be's.

I know your over me.

I walk to the window, slip on my lonely shoes

I put on some coffee so I can keep on wishin' I was over you

But I'm not over you.

My heart is heavy it's a weight on my shoulder

And everyday it's getting' colder and colder

Just like a rose that dies, it never blooms again

Never gonna get to know, I'll never know what might've
been

And like a season that's been taken by the wind

You're gone, gone

Like the leaves of September

Now I look in the mirror and a broken man is all I see

I wash my face but I can't seem to wash away these broken dreams

It's all I do it seems

Well I, miss your voice and I miss your sweet laugh

Can't stop thinking that forever's what we could've had

But that's what we'll never have

I tell myself that it's over, it's over

And every time I do it's just getting colder and colder

Just like a rose that dies, it never blooms again

Never gonna get to know, I'll never know what might've

And like a season that's been taken by the wind

You're gone, gone

Like the leaves of September

Just like a rose that dies, it never blooms again

Never gonna get to know, I'll never know what might've

And like a season that's been taken by the wind

Just like a rose that dies, it never blooms again
Never gonna get to know, I'll never know what might've
And like a season that's been taken by the wind
You're gone, gone
Like the leaves of September.
