Thankyou (Lyrics by Kristen Henderson)

I promised someday you'd share the same marquee didn't know how, didn't matter to me.

I have no idea who knows you, whose gotten hold of this myth, but you're a legend since the 50's only it hasn't gone public yet

Your as sexy as a sax in blue notes, and clever as Costello carving lyrics from bone.

Sure you toyed with writerly genius which has a fleeting cache, but you've been saving lives for years and that's more than any Pulitzer could say.

And then there's the matter of paint how it runs through your body like blood...but it ain't the only card up your sleeve just one ace in a hand of so many,

you keep playing to raise the ante.

There's so much to say about other heroes, How their music explodes the darkest shadows, how their process takes us away and drops us off home, but this song's about you my glorious unknown.

And thank you, thank you for everything.

promise someday

share the same marquee
didn't know how, didn't matter to me.
