adapted from "the prophet" by kahlil gibran lyrics by kahlil gibran and jason mraz you were born together and together ye shall be forever until death should scatter it wouldn't matter in the memory of God above let the wind of heaven dance between you too allow the space and time to bring you closer to everlasting love cause God moves

what do you do God moves through you

when love beckons his ways are often hard and steep when his wings enfold ye yield to all he speaks the sword it might be hidden there among his pinions oh you may wear a wound that truly spoke to you believe in all that voice and follow through follow so on and on what do you do when God moves through you

say i do
i do

just remember love possesses nothing nor would it ever be possessed oh love is love sufficient unto love and you can figure out the rest your children will not be your children they are the daughters and the son of a beginning they'll come through your womb but not be coming from you they will be with you but do not belong to you you may give them your love but not your thoughts then they'll arrive with their own hearts they're the coming of angels this blessed season and then they'll sing oh how God rests in reason God rests in reason

so what do you do ooh when God moves through you

think not you can direct the course of love itself directs the course allowed believe not God is in your heart, child but rather you're in the heart of God

i do

love itselfs directs the course allowed

remember God rests in reason
i do
