Remember the curse we called sixteen And that summer was the hottest it had ever been We went walking, just walking through those brown, brick rows
Called the suburbs, the only world that anyone there knows

You almost lost your balance walking the fence
One side was cold like ice, the other, hot like fire events
Spiralled just like some baltic ballet
And given half the chance to do it over

Could you do it again?
Remember the joy we called eighteen?
And that summer, we were more drunk Than we'd ever been

And the night time always heralded something new And the only thing we needed was me, and just me and you
Yeah, I was singing your tune Every afternoon I kept on singing your tune

Remember, do you only, you could love this I got A gut when I sit down, it seems that you don't even care at all
And those summer tunes can make You forget almost anything you want to
