in the breathless hush of four am in the dark sits a sad cliché' cloaked in the navy blu of slowly fading stars

tell me how this came to be sleeplessness talk to me she'd say over and over again fumbling through a cut glass vase passing lipstick and cotton spools burning jealous pictures of marriages of friends

you never asked to be the glutton of sympathy she says over and and over that this is the end

'cause i see it in her eyes what you don't know, time to let go i see it in your eyes there is so much more out there to be learned such mornful words on this white snow vacant page all the lesson that she learns she packs away will you never cease to be

the glutton of sympathy
she writes over and over again that's when i see it in your eyes

what you don't know time to let go i see it in your eyes there is so much more out there to be learned tossing, turning roll away indecision won't you ever make up your mind lifetime nighttime wake the day

'cause tomorrow will see if you've had your fill of sympathy

don't you know the stars are all fading let the sunshine capture the sparkle of your smile
