A hymn for the praise of the setting sun in ancient egypt my home Child of Horus catch the morningstar to the Elysian fields we will go The god at the top of the staircase the usurper that weighs our hearts In your court I deliver my soul to be coming forth by day North, south, east and west
My bones lay all around My shadow will soon get rest to higher ground I'll be bound In the temple of the dead
In the temple of the dead
I am the moongod who dwelleth among the dead
I shall not perish in heaven or on earth I've cleft the horizon, I've passed through the underworld
I have divided the heavens and scattered the gloom of night
To sail the northern heaven with the sacred eye of stars
The white crown I bear forever the immortality of my soul
In the temple of the dead
In the temple of the dead
