Who was that sneaking up the stairs
Taking a hairpin from her hair
A vision of the locks fallin' down
Crossed my mind and played with the sound
Of tapping gentle tapping at my morning starship
The crystal glint of the turning glass
The creaking sound of the rusted latch
As she slowly opened the door
The darkness told me nothing more
Except, except that she was near my morning starship
She stood within the threshold silently
A ray of moonlight caught her eye
Without a word she said, "Could I come in?"
I said why not you're in already

You might as well stay awhile
She made her way across the room
A ray of moonlight caught her eye
The perfect head framed in silver blue
Found it's way to mine and then I knew
The girl the girl the girl had flown my morning starship
She's gone away what can I do
She took the key she's got the clue
Mysteries unfold with the latch
What she knows I'll never forget
The girl the girl the girl has flown my morning starship
She's travelled with me now in my morning starship
